

Jorvig Consulting, Inc. Announces the Release of 6 White Papers to Assist Engineering Design Teams Improve their Project Execution by Minimizing Disconnects

Jorvig Consulting, Inc. has released 6 white papers that discuss methods for improvements to a design teams effectiveness by minimizing disconnects in the product development process. The key thread that runs through all of these white papers is the necessary ownership of the design process by the design team. The design team should not assume that the details of their design process can effectively be defined and/or tracked by overall formal program management techniques.

Chandler, AZ (PRWEB) February 4, 2005 -- In most product design organizations today the technical output of the team is top notch. What tends to be an area where the teams frequently need some additional support is in the area of planning and execution to that plan. "Many organizations assume that formalized program management methodologies handle the details within design" says Jeff Jorvig, President of Jorvig Consulting, Inc. "That assumption is not necessarily valid. Design team's must be prepared to take an active role in developing and managing their own processes for design activities to prevent unexpected surprises in their development" Jorvig continues.

Six complimentary white papers have been made available by Jorvig Consulting, Inc. that touch on several different areas and methodologies to help design organizations improve their execution through development of their design processes. The white papers can found at the Jorvig Consulting website at www.jorvigconsulting.com/position.htm . These documents were written to stimulate thinking and help you develop and refine your strategies for managing your design teams. "Unexpected surprises during design execution do not need to be the norm.." says Jorvig.
